The longest-running study abroad program at Cal Poly Pomona since 1993. It is arguably welcomed more than 700 Cal Poly Pomona students to the Italy Study Abroad Program and has Fiorentino practically a rite of passage. Professor Philip Pregill establishes the Italy Study Abroad Program, partnering with the Santa Chiara Study Center, a resident research institution and a cultural liaison. House in a renovated 15th-century convent, the center has student dormitories, dining and study spaces. Its famous courtyard overlooks the Val di Chio, one of several lush valleys at the foothills of the Apennine Mountains.

Amici di ENV (Friends of ENV) is launched to commemorate the 65th anniversary of the Department of Landscape Architecture. Open to 50 non-student guests, the nine-day tour highlights the rural delights of the region: food, wine, print-making with local artisans, cooking, even truffle hunting. The program finds a new base in Agritourismo Sorgente. The program itself is unaltered.

COVID-19 is declared a national emergency, and university travel is suspended. The department also pauses Amici di ENV. The program is suspended. The program itself is unaltered.

The program finds a new base in Agritourismo Sorgente. The program itself is unaltered.

The Italy Study Abroad Program hopes to resume in spring 2022, pending public health guidance.

The Student Innovation Idea Labs (SIIL) enhance the PolyX experience by creating spaces that foster creativity, innovation and entrepreneurship. The Maker Space in the University Library and Innovation Orchard at Ganesha High School in Pomona, as well as three future spaces, allow students to collaborate with their peers on projects, research and creative ventures.

ARE TWO CENTRIST SENATORS REALLY SO POWERFUL?

Ahead of the 2022 elections, the Biden administration and Democrats are working hard to advance major agenda items. Neilan Chaturvedi, associate professor of political science and author of "Life in the Middle: Marginalized Moderate Senators in the Era of Polarization," explains power dynamics in the U.S. Senate, the influence of centrist Senators and whether the filibuster might become history.

What is the role of centrists?

The story is really polarization. Centrists give you the votes you need to get things done, but they are not powerbrokers. Some Democrats say, "I wish we could get rid of Joe Manchin." Okay, well you're going to lose the Senate forever. You need people like Manchin to get things done, unless you restructure the Senate. Republicans needed Susan Collins, for example, to get Brett Kavanaugh on the U.S. Supreme Court. You may not particularly like that Collins is on your team, that someone is shooting 40 percent of the voters every time. So, Collins has to straddle both sides instead of representing the middle. Collins is a Democrat representing deep red West Virginia. It's kind of impossible to do, but he does a pretty good job of it. He has to straddle that line and demonstrate the independence to represent West Virginia and not the Democratic party.

None of those are really positions of power. If Republicans win the Senate, it would be by a small margin. Then the situation becomes flipped. Instead of Manchin and Sinema being the deciding votes, it's Susan Collins and Lisa Murkowski, mainly Collins because Maine is more moderate than Alaska.

If Republicans take control, Collins will be the one looking like Manchin, protecting the filibuster because she doesn't want any extra pressure on herself.

Expert Q&A

Why aren't there more moderate Senators?

There aren't any truly moderate states. There are states that are moderate in the aggregate. For example, Maine has that rural constituency that's very, very conservative and a more liberal northeast region that is amenable to liberal policies. To represent them, if you stay right in the middle, you're going to piss off most of the voters every time. So, Collins has to straddle both sides instead of representing the middle. Manchin is a Democrat representing deep red West Virginia. It's kind of impossible to do, but he does a pretty good job of it. He has to straddle that line and demonstrate the independence to represent West Virginia and not the Democratic party.

None of those are really positions of power.

Any predictions for 2022?

If Republicans win the Senate, it would be by a small margin. Then the situation becomes flipped. Instead of Manchin and Sinema being the deciding votes, it's Susan Collins and Lisa Murkowski, mainly Collins because Maine is more moderate than Murkowski's more independent and conservative Alaska. If Republicans take control, Collins will be the one looking like Manchin, protecting the filibuster because she doesn't want any extra pressure on herself.

Student Innovation Idea Labs

For landscape architecture students in the College of Environmental Design, Castiglion Fiorentino is a rite of passage. This Tuscan hill town of 13,000 hosts each fall, students spend 12 weeks in rural east Tuscany, their days occupied with field trips to significant landscapes, and visits to Rome and Venice.