Hello Broncos!

Happy New Year and welcome to spring semester 2019. I hope your winter break was a happy and healthful one. As always, I've missed the bustle that pervades our campus when classes are in session, and I am excited to have everyone back.

For some of you, this location may look a little unfamiliar. I am standing on the grounds of our brand-new Student Services Building. As its name indicates, this stunning facility was designed, constructed, and occupied with one goal in mind — serving students. Here, in one easy to navigate location, are all the campus academic and financial services supporting students on the path to graduation. And as our latest landmark, this building also serves as the new gateway to our campus, welcoming faculty, staff, students, alumni, and visitors alike.

On the hill behind me sits Union Plaza. One of the original buildings on campus, it served as a stable for W.K. Kellogg's Arabian horses before he generously donated the more than 800 acres that would become Cal Poly Pomona. This iconic structure has since been transformed into a hub of student activity, housing a number of the student-led organizations so essential to our university.

I find it quite inspiring that our oldest building and now our newest both serve the same ambition. I invite the campus community to visit our new Student Services Building, become familiar with the resources here, and be reminded how we are truly One Team with One Goal — Student Success.

You can learn more about the new Student Services Building in the informational video linked in the description below. I also invite you to follow me on Instagram. That link is in the description as well.

I wish everyone a successful semester and look forward to all that we will accomplish together.

Go Broncos!
