Program Description	Students enrolled in other academic programs, especially those outside of the College of Education and Integrative Studies, may broaden their intellectual base and historical knowledge by completing an academic minor in Native American Studies. This minor is designed to supplement student studies in other major fields. Many Gender, Ethnicity and Multicultural Studies (GEMS) Minors find opportunities for application of the knowledge and academic preparation they have obtained in their minor to understanding the social, political and historical experience of Native Americans in the United States and globally. It is possible for students majoring in most other fields to complete the minor in Native American Studies within the normal requirements of their degree through careful planning and scheduling of their required courses.
